TIMBLUMS & JEFFROE The perennially hip Los Angeles duo, whose roster includes Tim Hawkinson, Sharon Lockhart and Keith Tyson, reopened in a new 21,000-square-foot space in October.

MARIANNE BOESKY Boesky is said to have done well at Frieze, mainly thanks to large-scale watercolors by collector favorite Barnaby Furnas. New Yorkers have come to count on the Chelsea gallerist for museum-caliber shows, and the Arte Povera survey opening next month could be among them.

MASSIMO DE CARLO The Milan dealer, who represents an A-list of established international artists (Chris Burden and Carsten Höller among them), is invading London with a new Dover Street space set to open this month.

ARNE GLIMCHER PaceWildenstein's chairman reopened the gallery's huge Beijing branch this fall after a 13-month hiatus for renovations. The inaugural show of Zhang Xiaogang silkscreened steel plates sold out immediately.

BARRY FRIEDMAN The fine- and decorative-arts purveyor again proved his aesthetic savvy this past fall with his mold-shattering show of Venetian glass by Cristiano Bianchin, Yoichi Ohira and Laura de Santillana, three artists whose work he first championed more than a decade ago.

DOMINIQUE LEVY & ROBERT MNUCHIN The pair behind New York's L & M Arts holds the keys to the secondary market for works by 20th-century legends like Francis Bacon and Roy Lichtenstein.

DANIEL MALINGUE The respected Paris dealer of Impressionist and modern art received new acclaim as the mastermind behind FIAC's Modern Project, in which 10 big-name galleries flaunted their gems, much to the chagrin of auction houses starved for treasure.

VICTORIA MIRO The London mega-dealer, known for her longtime representation of now-blue-chip artists like Peter Doig and Chris Ofili, opened the fall season with an ambitious show of a huge tapestry by the 2003 Turner Prize winner Grayson Perry.

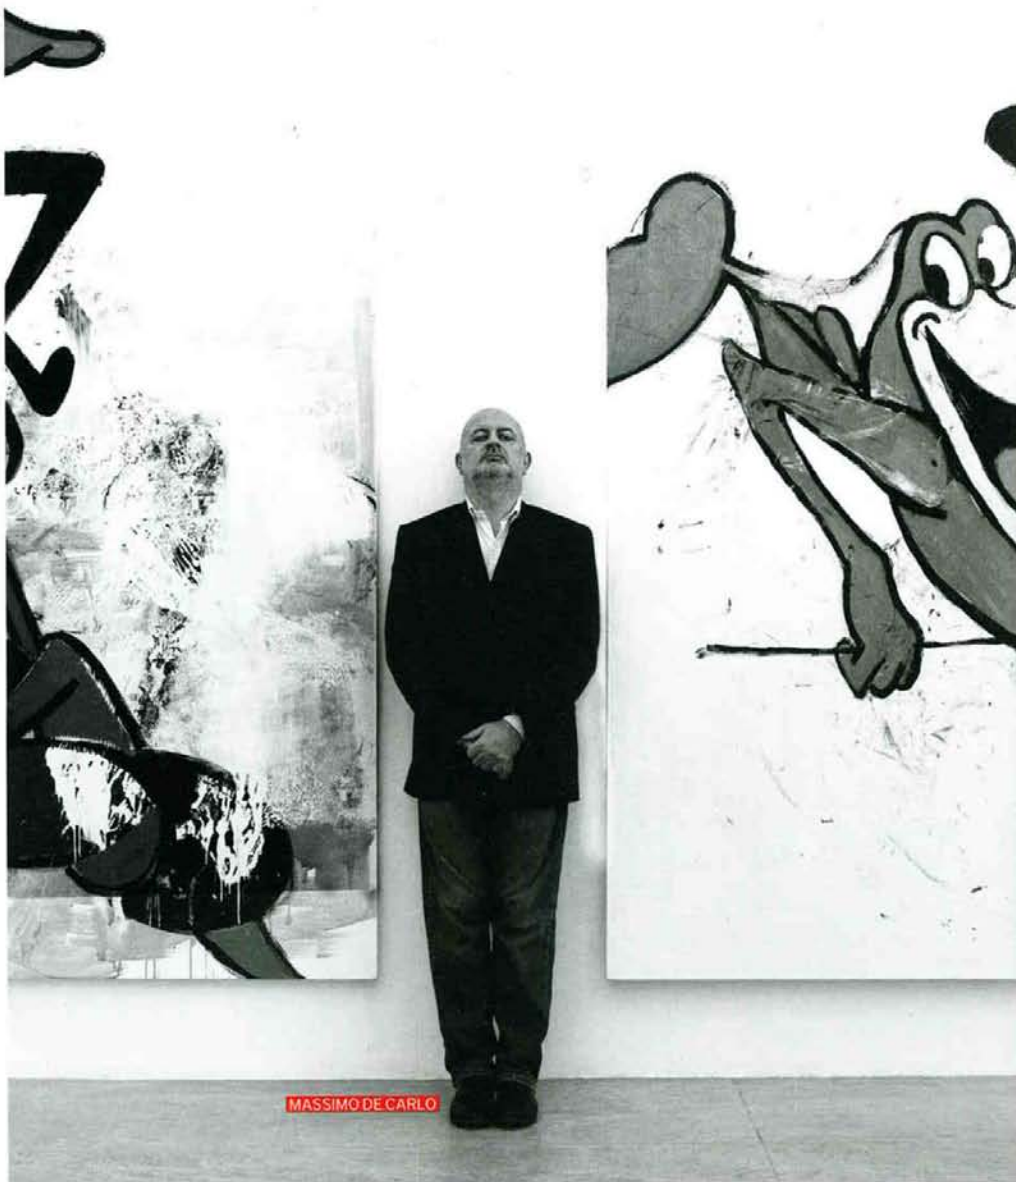

EMMANUEL PERROTIN After a yearlong sabbatical, the Parisian dealer—who represents some of his country's best and brightest,

Sophie Calle and Xavier Veilhan among them—reopened his Miami space this month with a solo show by Matthew Day Jackson. IWAN & MANUELA WIRTH The Zurich couple, who opened a long-anticipated New York outpost in the fall, continue to beef up their all-star roster with additions like Indian sculptor Subodh Gupta.

DAVID ZWIRNER The New York dealer expanded his square footage with a new white cube on West 19th Street. He also nabbed formal representation of the Dan Flavin estate.
